

Promoter Unveils Details For 2015 Original Miami Beach Antique Show

MIAMI, FLA. — US Antique Shows recently announced that 95 percent of all booths are sold for the upcoming 54th Annual Original Miami Beach Antique Show, January 30–February 3, including a completely sold out jewelry ballroom. Known as the world’s largest indoor antiques show, this five-day event showcases nearly 1,000 recognized national and international dealers at the Miami Beach Convention Center.

Seven months prior to the event, the promoter has also reported a 90 percent renewal rate from previous exhibiting dealers.

“The Original Miami Beach Antique Show is the benchmark event in the antiques and antique jewelry industry, and sets the pace in the global antiques market for the year,” said Dan Darby, Emerald Expositions vice president and US Antique Shows general manager. “As we approach the midyear mark for 2014, we knew it was imperative to provide this exciting update to all that consistently take part in our show each year.”

To enhance the shopping experience and support education, US Antique Shows will also offer the second annual Jewelry History series. The jewelry conference will take place before the Original Miami Beach Antique Show on January 28–29 and has a comprehensive schedule, including presentations from an array of jewelry experts, a complementary tour of a local museum and a tour of select booths prior to the opening of the show.

In addition, US Antique Shows is once again partnering with Skinner Auctioneers & Appraisers to host an Appraisal Day at the 2015 show. All attendees with a valid ticket to the show are invited to bring one item to be appraised by one of Skinner’s appraisers.

US Antique Shows now produces nine shows nationally. The next show scheduled is the New York Antique Jewelry & Watch Show, July 25–28 at the Metropolitan Pavilion.
